Rise of the hacking machines - CNET

The computers are competing to be the best at a tedious and challenging task that human cybersecurity researchers do every day: find a bug in a software program, then fix it. writing.upenn.edu

All had strong ties to Europe. Engdahl said Europe draws literary exiles because it "respects the independence of literature" and can serve as a safe haven. "Very many authors who have their roots in other countries work in Europe because it is only here where you can be left alone and write, without being beaten to death," he said. "It is dangerous to be an author."
